

WEBINAR

A Vision and Strategy for Remaking the National Center for Education Statistics (NCES)

Do you care about evidence informing educational progress? Does your work depend on the consistent collection of education-related information? Do you believe decisions at any level, from federal and state policy to parental decisions about where to enroll their children for school, should be informed by accurate, reliable, and unbiased data? Then you have a stake in the future of NCES.

ASA is holding a webinar to overview a set of ideas about the future of NCES, as presented by Shelly Wilkie Martinez and Stephen Provasnik in their report, "A Vision and Strategy for Remaking the National Center for Education Statistics," and to hear from YOU about what matters, what you need most from a future NCES, and what role a future NCES can most effectively play in the education data ecosystem.
